

The ban on cell phone use aboard aircraft should be lifted. Technological advances allow for airborne cell phone use without causing interference to other electronic devices and without overloading cell phone systems.

As for interference with aircraft instruments, the FCC should defer to the FAA in this area. As for etiquette, that is outside the scope of the FCC's authority in this matter and the FCC should defer to aircraft operators.